

EMERGING TRENDS IN KENYAN CHILDREN'S FICTION: A STUDY OF SASA SEMA'S LION BOOKS

Colomba Kaburi Muriungi

A thesis submitted to the faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences, University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, in fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

Johannesburg, 2006

Abstract

This thesis is a study of the Sasa Sema's Lion Series of biographies written for young readers. The Sasa Sema project is concerned with archiving the stories of famous historical figures and contemporary heroes. The research examines the shifts or the trends these biographies take as compared to what has been in existence in discourses on children's writing in Kenya in the past. I argue that the issues that these biographies are concerned with are a novelty in Kenyan children's literature. By writing biographies of historical figures in Kenya, the authors are not only making an intervention by creating new models for children's literature, but they also show that the story of the nation cannot be enacted outside the heroic struggles of its peoples. I further argue that the Sasa Sema project is significant because many writers of children's literature in Kenya, and in East Africa in general, write mostly about childhood stories rather than historical figures. Also, the characters used in the biographies are adult characters rather than young fictional animal and human characters that have characterized children's literature in the past. I conclude that these changes broaden the scope of children's literature in Kenya.

The changes in writing for children in Kenya, evident in the biographies under study are examined across the chapters that make up this thesis. Chapter One attempts to locate the biographies under study within Kenya's children's literary tradition by looking at the trajectory this literature has taken from pre-colonial time to the present. Chapter Two examines how orality as a stylistic device is used in the texts under study first, to create literary appreciation and secondly, as a means of summoning literature from different cultural backgrounds in which the texts are based. The chapter argues that the use of oral art forms evokes identity and signals cultural diversity in the Kenyan society. Chapter Three addresses the question of female heroism and gender stereotypes in children's literature. This chapter intimates that biographies, whose narratives draw from real life situations, help in revising the representation of the female character in children's literature. Chapter Four examines how individual stories are used to narrate Kenya's history of decolonization for the children. This chapter also avows that the process of colonization created heroes through colonialist institutions such as schools and prisons. Chapter Five examines how the Sasa Sema project argues for the recognition of minority groups that have been marginalized in narratives of nation formation, while Chapter Six discusses the biography of Dedan Kimathi a Mau Mau freedom fighter. The female narrator in Kimathi's biography, who is also positioned as a participant in the war portrays children's literature as a vehicle for paying homage to women's role in the Mau Mau war. In Chapter Seven, I attempt to harmonize the conclusions reached in the previous chapters.

Declaration

I declare that this thesis is my own unaided work. It is submitted for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg. It has not been submitted before for any other degree or examination at any other university.

Colomba Kaburi Muriungi

____ day of _____, 2006.

Dedication

This thesis is dedicated to the three members of my family: My husband Peter, and my two sons Vincent and Victor.

Acknowledgements

I would like to thank my supervisor Prof. James Ogude for his support in the writing of this thesis, especially his challenging comments that went a long way in making me a more open-minded researcher. Other members of staff, Prof. Hofmeyr, Prof. Peterson and Dr. Ojwang, thank you for offering me a great academic atmosphere for study. And to Dr. Tom Odhiambo, I am grateful for the brainstorms we had at the beginning of this study when I was still trying to figure out the trajectory of my research. Many thanks to the administrative secretary Merle Govind, who always made things work every time I was in need. I extend my gratitude to Wits University for financial assistance. The Postgraduate Merit Award, the University Council Postgraduate Scholarship, and Harold and Doris Tothill Prestige Scholarship certainly made my life at Wits comfortable. To Prof. Lila Luce, the managing director of the Sasa Sema Publications, and Dr. Ezekiel Alembe of Kenyatta University, I am grateful for the interview sessions you offered at the initial stages of this study concerning the Sasa Sema project.

I want to thank most sincerely my mother-in-law, Ruth Karimi and my father-in-law, Samuel Muriungi. May God bless you for your generosity. What you did for my children in my absence cannot be expressed in mere words. You are great people and a rare breed! My husband Peter thanks for your love, support and your constant jokes that kept me alive even when I thought things were not working out. I cannot thank you enough but all I can say is IBWEGA MUNO MURUNGU AGUTETHIE. To my sons manlike Vincent and manlike Victor, thank you for your unfailing patience in the long wait for your mother to finish her PhD. Here it is.

A special nod goes to my sisters Cecilia, Felicita and Lydia, who paid my children frequent visits. And my other Sister, Sr. Josephine Muthoni; you were far away from home because of the demands of your vocation, but I sincerely appreciate your commitment to my children. The phone calls you made to find out how they were faring and the occasional visits are greatly appreciated. I cannot thank you enough for your concern over my progress and your prayers for the success of this thesis. Baba and Mama, thank you for assuring me that my kids would be fine every time I paid you a visit. Your encouragements gave me extra energy.

To Osita and Tam-George, your chats made me feel I had company in this race. And to my friends and my girls: Ann Ajulu, Jacinta, Sue, Flo, Grace and Dina, your company is greatly appreciated. Flo, I will “miss” our late night walks home. And before I forget, remember you are always welcome to “the back of beyond". Lastly, but not least, I would like to extend my appreciation to Mr. Senawon for making time to proofread this work.

Some parts of Chapter Four of this thesis appear in Literator: Journal of Literary Criticism and Comparative Linguistics and Literary Studies, 25(3) Nov. 2004: 181-197, under the title "Let's Sing our Heroes: A Comparison of Biographical Series for Children in Kenya and South Africa".

Chapter Six has been published in The Journal of Children's Literature Studies, 2(2) July 2005:13-28, under the title "Teaching History through Fiction: The Mau Mau Narrative in Contemporary Kenyan Children's Literature".

TABLE OF CONTENTS

CONTENTS	PAGE
Title page	i
Abstract	ii
Declaration	iii
Dedication	iv
Acknowledgements	v-vi
Chapter 1: General Introduction to Kenya's Children's Literature	1-45
Chapter 2: Invoking the Community: Orality and Cultural Diversity	46-78
Chapter 3: Gender in Children's Literature: The Female Character in Biographical Writing	79-105
Chapter 4: Individual Stories as Narratives of Colonial Invasion and Decolonization	106-145
Chapter 5: Retelling Stories of the Marginalized through Children's Literature	146-183
Chapter 6: Through the Eyes of a Woman: The Mau Mau Narrative in Children's Literature	184-209
Chapter 7: Conclusion	210-218
Bibliography	219-237